Content

In this series of classes, we focus on strategic analysis and organizational development from the perspectives of marketing, HRM and business administration. We begin by establishing objectives based on the organizational mission and strategy, examining the scope of activities, resource allocation and competitive advantages. We further explore internal organizational aspects, such as structure, division of labor, motivation, tasks and coordination. We offer insights into organizational structures, models and systems.
In addition, we analyze the external environment, including the industries in which organizations operate and direct and indirect environmental factors. SWOT analysis and value chain analysis are covered as crucial tools for strategic decision-making.
This class series provides the concepts and tools necessary to understand effective strategic analysis and organizational development, with specific focus on marketing, HRM and business administration.
